Global Bioeconomy Summit Conference Brochure

25.–26. November 2015, Berlin, Germany

Welcome Address on the Occasion of the Global Bioeconomy Summit 2015

The number of people in the world is growing, whereas the earth's natural resources are limited. This simple fact poses one of the greatest challenges we face today: how can we succeed in meeting the needs of present and future generations alike?

A biobased economy offers a promising prospect. It relies on renewable resources and scientific findings. This means that renewable resources and biotechnological processes primarily help to safeguard food security and are also used to generate sustainable energy and in industrial manufacturing.

Several years ago, the Federal Government launched the National Research Strategy BioEconomy 2030 and the National Policy Strategy on Bioeconomy. Essentially, these two strategies will strengthen the bioeconomy as the driving force of innovation and the key to sustainable growth. To this end, we are promoting interdisciplinarity and collaboration between science and industry, as well as international cooperation. In addition, we want to engage in an intensive dialogue with society. After all, the duty to ensure responsible use of the world's finite natural resources concerns every one of us.

The first Global Bioeconomy Summit held by the German Bioeconomy Council provides an excellent forum for exchanging views on different approaches and experiences across national borders. In view of the important decisions on climate and sustainability policy that will be made this year, global collaboration on the bioeconomy has particular precedence. As patron, I thus hope for a successful outcome of the conference and I wish all participants and guests interesting meetings and stimulating discussions.

Welcome Address Federal Minister of Education and Research of Germany

How can the world economy grow sustainably without threatening our natural resources? How can we feed billions of people under these circumstances? How can we wisely reconcile economic and ecological concerns while ensuring that the opportunities and challenges of globalization are shared fairly? The bioeconomy can provide valuable answers to these questions. Research, development and innovation are the keys to a sustainable future. The Federal Government therefore decided at an early stage to adopt a research policy and strategy which promotes the transformation towards a sustainable bio-based economy.

The bioeconomy is becoming an increasingly important concept. Governments all over the world are focusing on green innovations, resource efficiency and sustainable life cycle management. But a truly sustainable bioeconomy can only be achieved if stakeholders on all continents cooperate with one another. This is why we need to follow a global approach: The regional or national objectives which have been defined and the measures which have already been launched must be integrated into a common global bioeconomy agenda.

The Global Bioeconomy Summit provides an opportunity to make further progress with international cooperation. The German Bioeconomy Council has organized this first international bioeconomy meeting as a forum for exchange and networking. I am convinced that this global dialogue on a sustainable bioeconomy will provide many new ideas for shaping our future.

Welcome Address Conference Committee

Daniel Barben
Head of Conference
Committee

Bioeconomy having evolved as a concept in the 1990's has developed into a strategic option in solving the global challenges of food security and climate change. Despite its relative novelty, notions of bioeconomy have gained significant importance especially during the past five years. According to research carried out by the German Bioeconomy Council in preparation for the Global Bioeconomy Summit, 45 countries around the world have adopted bioeconomy strategies as part of their economic innovation agendas. Now it is time to provide a forum for exploring and debating issues pertaining to the challenges and opportunities in the development of a global bioeconomy. We warmly welcome you to this first Global Bioeconomy Summit!

Christine Lang
Chair, German
Bioeconomy
Council

As Bioeconomy combines far-reaching ambition with regional adaptation, there will be no such thing as a singular bioeconomy but rather a plurality varieties. Realizing the rich potentials of bioeconomy requires a common understanding of its foundations and perspectives. International dialogue is needed to define and guide bioeconomy in the context of related or competing notions and interests, for instance with regard to holistic concepts of biological resources or unique features such as carbon neutrality, renewability, re-usability and multi-functionality.

Joachim v. Braun
Chair, German
Council

Therefore, the Global Bioeconomy Summit aspires to serve as a starting point for a coordinated and collaborative approach to assessing and advancing the sustainable bioeconomy. We hope that this may help create a true level playing field for bioeconomy strategies as regards global policy-making, mitigating climate change, ensuring food security, and achieving sustainable development in environmental, economic as well as social terms. We are meeting in Berlin to give a future-oriented bioeconomy, including its base in science and society, a strong voice – and develop plans that may be for the benefit of many!

Program 25.11.2015
